MAN AND TWO SHEEP IN A BOAT

BILLY QUIGLEY HANDLES A MU-TINY AND TAKES AN OATH.

Adds Anti-Mutton Pledge to Water Wagen Vow-This Happened After He Had Given a Free Show for a Battery Crowd and Satisfied the Lascars' Scruptes

silly Quigley, the Battery boatman, who s almost as picturesque as his language, has sworn off on mutton. He is just as serious about it as he was when he took the plodge twenty years ago never again to touch a drop of anything alcoholic, even though it might be recommended by a physician.

It was only the sacredness of this latter resolution that prevented Billly from dropping off the water wagon when he took the anti-mutton oath last week. Billy had entered into contract with a downtown butcher to convey two live sheep to the British steamship Barotse, which was anchored below Liberty Island and ready to sail for Leith. She came here from Calcutta and ports of the Far East, and she has a crew made up chiefly of Lascars, who will eat no other meat than that of animals they themselves kill according to a religious

Billy shipped the sheep at the Battery boat basin north of the Barge Office. After addressing a few choice sentiments to them and lamenting the ways of heathen meat eaters he forced them to lie down in the bottom of the boat and bent his sternest gaze on them, incidentally bending to his

The sheep apparently had never been in a boat before and when they found themselves moving they got up and started to mutiny. Having no belaying pins, which nautical etiquette requires men of the sea to use on mutineers, Billy poked an oar into the faces of the sheep and ordered them to "Lay down, you dirty landlubbers."

One of them jumped overboard and began to swim toward the Battery wall, while a multitude of Billy's friends looked on and laid bets, first on the sheep and then on Billy, in tones that were intended to rattle the boatman. Billy expressed his opinion of the betters in language that might, if printed, cause subscribers to stop their papers. He overtook the sheep and hauled it aboard by the tail, which fortunately was firmly anchored, as Billy's grasp is somewhat fervent. Just then the other sheep tumbled out into the bay over the stern. This was a fine opening for the ironical gathering on the Battery wall, and they shouted in chorus Say, Billy, the other one's overboard! Want volunteer life savers?"

Billy was too busy to give more than a savage glance at the Battery wall audience. He punched the sheep that he had rescued into a state of coma, and, picking up his cars, headed for the swimming sheep, which had a start of half a dozen boat lengths and was going seaward.

The enthusiasm of the bettors grew voferous. The odds were on the sheep. The boatman, as he confessed later, was regretting that he knew only one language and that a sheep couldn't understand even that. The swimming sheep got exhausted before it was overhauled. It had shipped a bellyful of salt water and was dragged into the boat in a state of collapse.

Billy, knowing that a sick or a dead sheep

Billy, knowing that a sick or a dead sheep would not be taken by the Lascars, began practising first aid to the drowning on the sheep. The other sheep, which was silent, and the Battery wall aggregation, which was not silent, looked on.

After Billy had forced about a gallon of water out of the disabled sheep it was able to stand. One of Billy's friends on the wall suggested that he should row in and get a flask of brandy for the poor creature, and Billy responded that a whiff of the speaker's breath would be a blessed sight more efbreath would be a blessed sight more ef-

Billy responded that a whiff of the speaker's breath would be a blessed sight more effective.

It is a very long pull from the Battery to the anchorage a mile below Liberty Island, especially with the tide running strong flood, and Billy decided to get a tow from the steamboat Thomas Patten lying at the Battery wall and ready to sail for the Shrewsbury. He rowed agtern of the Patten and made his painter fast.

The sheep had revived much and were able to sit up and take notice. About two minutes before the Patten started she blew a sharp blast.

This was too much for the overwrought nervee of the sheep that had taken the first plunge. It rose, and before the boatman could swat it with an oar it had leaped over the gunwale.

The excursionists and some of the crew of the Patten became almost as much interested in the chase this time as Billy's friends on Battery wall. Billy had got to the point where language of any sort was inadequate, and he simply foamed at the sheep, the jeerers and at the universe as a whole.

The sheep was less than two boat's lengths

a whole.

The sheep was less than two boat's lengths away when Billy, who had cast off his painter in a jiffy, got alongside it. The cheers that came from the excursionists as Billy dragged the sheep back into the boat were sincere, but they hardly compensated for the fake approval from Battery wall.

The sheep had gulped down much water and toppled over in the boat. Billy got back to the Patten and made fast to her again a few seconds before she sailed. With both hands free he was able to get the sheep in presentable condition before he reached the steamship.

It was more than half an hour's hard work and involved close contact with the sheep. The head man of the Lascars did a good deal of inspecting before finally accepting the sheep.

when Billy got back to Battery Park he found a very innocent appearing lot of men, who asked him with manifestions of men, who asked him with manifestions of great concern if he had succeeded in getting his sheep aboard the steamship. They seemed to doubt his explosive declaration that he had, remarking that his vicinity smelled as if he had a flook concealed about his clothes.

"I don't believe I'll ever get rid of that smell," Billy said yesterday. "It makes me feel like bathing. The next time I take meat out to a steamship it won't be on the hoof, and the next time I eat mutton it will be beefsteak."

Rattlers and Huckleberries.

Gaines correspondence Wittiamsport Gazette and Buttetin.

The Pine Creek barrens are where the buckseberries usually abound, but appearances indicate that they are to be scarce here abouts and throughout Tioga county this season. At this time of the year the barrens as a rule are fairly blue with these luscious berries, and a skilled picker earns from $2.50 a day upward.

The expert hangs the pail about his neck and milks the fruit in with both hands. Parties come and camp on the barrens for days, and pick from daylight till dark until they sather all that they have receptacles and wagon room to cart away. Thousands of bushels are gathered here annually, but this year is the exception. To the fascination of the work is added the element of danger, for the rattlesnake and huckleberry so together. Some families take advantage of the trip to smite the belibrid, and at the same time isy in a supply of rattlesnake oil by frying out the fiesh of the reptiles, which in addition to its medicinal properties, has a vector charm, as some people believe.
